Director's Note

I love when theatre goes beyond pure entertainment and touches my heart. For years, Les Misérables was the only musical that had truly done that for me...until I met Newsies. When a play is performed in such a way that you are drawn in and want to be part of the story, when you feel that the characters are your friends and what hurts them hurts you, when you want to fight the fight alongside them, and when all that happens in two short hours, that is the magic of live theatre.

In 1899, the streets of New York City were filled with voices of newsies hawking newspapers. The newsies were mostly made up of poor orphans and runaways, and selling “papes” was often their only source of income. The two major newspapers, The World and The Journal, were owned by the two most powerful men in the city, Joseph Pulitzer and William Randolph Hearst. What you are about to see is a fictional story based on the actual dramatic conflict between the young and seemingly powerless newsies and Pulitzer.

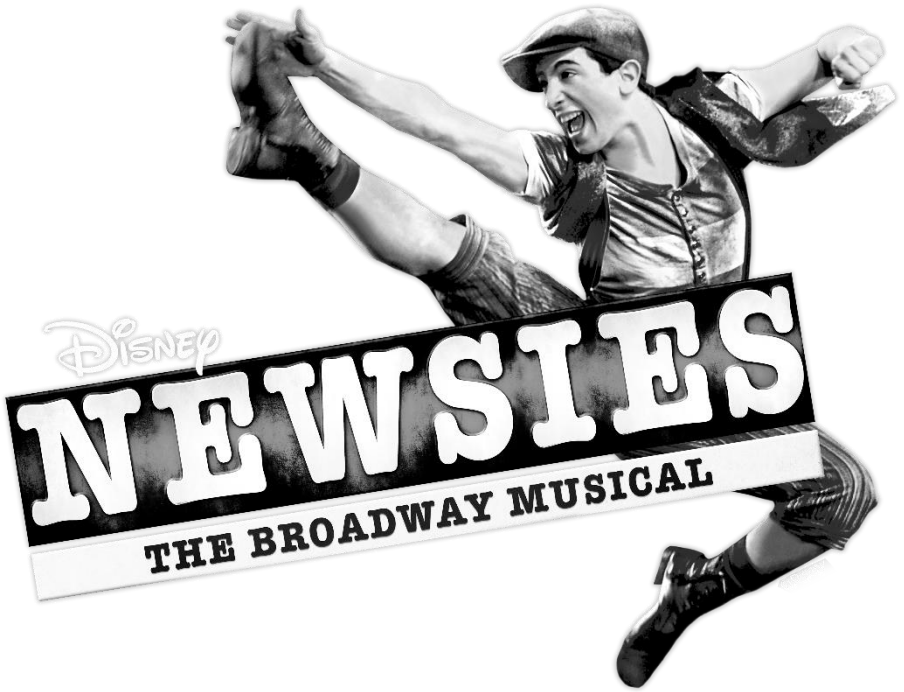

A lot has been written about the newsboy by strike of 1899, but what I find most compelling is how relevant the story continues to be today. Today's younger generation is facing unprecedented challenges. They have a strong desire to make the world a better place for all and have been motivated to address issues like inequality, political division, and climate change by rising up and “demanding a place at the table”. In response, we the older generation, should consider the directive of one of our Newsies characters: “Each generation must, at the height of its power, step aside and invite the young to share the day.”

Thank you for joining us today. Sit back, relax, and enjoy the show. Scratch that – lean in, because this cast and these characters will not let you sit on the sidelines and observe, so join them and “Seize the Day”!

With gratitude for all who have made this production possible,
Meg
